Strategies for Learning How to Spell

ACTIVITY #1

SEQUENCE: SPELLING AND SENTENCE STRUCTURE
2ND CYCLE – PRIMARY

By Lise L'Heureux,
Special Education Teacher, Director,
Instructor, Consultant and Coach

Purpose of the activity

The objective of this activity is to introduce you to different and fun ways to learn how to spell words.

Relevance of the activity

Often, children are asked to spell the words and write them down to memorize their spelling. In this activity, I propose different strategies that can be completed both orally and on paper. These strategies will get your child to think about the spelling of words and make connections that will help them understand spelling rules.

Supplies

- Paper and pencils or a whiteboard
- A list of words to study (if needed)
- Various children's books (if needed)

LET'S GO!

What?

Here are 5 strategies to learn how to spell words.

Why?

Most of the time, children are familiar with the words on their spelling lists. These words have been selected because they are often encountered in reading and used to write. For some children, even if they are often exposed to these words, learning how to spell them is still difficult. That is why we need to vary our approaches.

When?

These strategies can be easily used during lessons and when doing homework. You can use the list of vocabulary words, as well as children's books, to get your child to make connections between the words being studied and the similarities to new words they read.

How?

Here are different strategies you can use at home to support learning how to spell.

1 Review the sound of letters and groups of letters

This strategy is like a warm-up: We activate the child's knowledge about letter-sound correspondences. For each of the words being learned, you can ask:

- For example, what is the sound of the group of letters -al in the word hospital?
- In what other words can you find this letter or group of letters that make the same sound?

2 Play with syllables

Let's say your child is learning the word important. You would have three syllables to identify: im/por/tant. You could ask your child:

- In what other words can you find the syllable im?
- The syllable por?
- The syllable tant?

Don't hesitate to give your child a little help: It's not always easy to separate words at the right places.

3 Maximize spelling and word writing

Let's take the example of the word softly. You say the word to your child: softly. They repeat it while drawing out the word as they say it. They visualize the word in their head to recall the right letter-sound correspondences and then spell the word. Correct them if necessary. Ask your child to write the word with the correct letter-sound correspondences.

4 Identify a rule or similarity

From the list of the words being studied or words you've read, ask your child to find a word that looks similar and that follows the same logic. For example, if your child is learning the word courage they might list the words courageous, voyage, or could.

5 Make fun sentences

Select two words being studied that have similarities, such as the words certain and curtain. Ask your child to build a fun sentence from these words.

Don't forget!

Turn everyday moments into learning opportunities. When reading a book, stop and ask:

Can you find another word that looks like this one?

How could we break it into syllables?

Is there a spelling rule that might help us write it correctly?

By making spelling fun and engaging, your child will build confidence and retain words more easily!
